It's full steam ahead for Citi skipper

News analysis

It was anything but plain sailing after Vikram Pandit took on the "Titanic," but now he has landed a $22m package, writes Justin Barr

Vikram Pandit spent most of his first two years after being named Citigroup chief executive in 2007 defying expectations that his days at the bank were numbered as it came perilously close to collapse during the financial crisis.

But last week, as Citicombi to build on its first months in the new role, Pandit's strategy of focusing on consumer corporate and investment banking.

Perhaps, as critics would say, Pandit's strategy of focusing on consumer corporate and investment banking.

Japanese companies seek to take a bite of foreign growth

News analysis

Moves prompted by weak domestic economy, strong yen and low interest rates, says Lindsay Whipp

In the world of savers and investors, Japan has rarely been a shining star. But last week a combination of factors has prompted Japanese companies to look abroad for growth.

Deflation continues to be a problem for Japan, which is also weighed down by huge government debt and a falling population.

Japan's fragility was underlined last week with data showing the country had slipped back into recession under the strain of the triple earthquake and tsunami in March 11.

Yasuhiko Hasegawa, chief executive of Dai-ichi Kangyo Bank, says the bank is looking to expand its business overseas.

While last week's move represented a market increase in size on the part of Japanese companies, it is not unique. In fact, it is a continuation of a trend that has been going on for some time.

Murdoch signals push into education

News Corp chief in digital lessons move
Vision for learning outlined in GS talk

By Tim Brunkman in Paris

Robert Murdoch signalled that News Corp (the media group he heads) is making a significant new push into the education technology market, in a high-profile speech to the eEA conference in London on Tuesday. Murdoch, chairman of News Corp, said the company was looking to "transform the way we learn" and "transform the way we work".

Online grocers gain ground in US

News analysis
Doubts remain about expanding beyond cities into the suburbs, writes Alan Rapaport

The online grocery business was hailed a success just a decade ago, when venture capitalists poured money into the sector. But now, as the industry matures, doubts are being cast about its long-term viability.

After early optimism, however, the industry is now facing a reality check. Analysts are questioning whether online grocers can sustain their growth and profitability in the long run.

Some of the challenges facing online grocers include high delivery costs, limited product selection, and intense competition from traditional brick-and-mortar grocery stores.

Despite these challenges, some online grocers are still optimistic about their future. They believe that as technology improves and consumer habits change, the online grocery market will continue to grow.

However, others are more pessimistic. They argue that the online grocery market is still in its infancy and that many of the current players will struggle to survive in the long run.

Microsoft launches handset software upgrade

By Paul Taylor in New York

Microsoft launched a new version of its Windows Phone 7 smartphone operating system in New York on Tuesday, announcing that it would power the first of a new generation of Nokia handsets due to launch late this year.

The two technology companies on April finished a deal to team up in the smartphone market as they try to fight back against the dominance of Apple and Google. Microsoft's new software is designed to be a major upgrade, launching the next chapter in the company's mobile phone ambitions.

Intel joins shift to China as executive takes Beijing brief

By Barbara White in Beijing and Richard Jones in Hong Kong

Intel is joining the shift to China as its executive takes a brief to the Chinese government. The company is looking to expand its presence in the Chinese market and is seeking to establish a stronger relationship with the government.

Intel's executive is expected to meet with Chinese officials to discuss the company's plans for the future. The meeting is seen as a key step in Intel's strategy to grow its business in China.
